School Update

by Chris Flohr

The past four-day week certainly helped brighten the students spirits. With another four-day week ahead, NHS should be more loose on the coming week.

Homecoming seemed to be a success this past weekend. The 1990 Homecoming Court is: Gina Guerriero, Homecoming Queen, and Tiffany Taylor and Hope Mucha, 1st and 2nd runners-up, respectively. The game was not as all NHS rooters would have wanted it, but our guys hung tough. The dance, Saturday night, was a special event. All of the students and even the chaperones had a good time. All reports out of NHS about Homecoming weekend were good.

For those of you who read last week's Banner, it was mentioned that Homecoming was a time for college students and, even older alumni, to come back home. True to form, many alumni showed up for the football game on Friday night. The Alumni Band gave a spirited performance after the game with their inspirational rendition of the NHS alma mater. As corny as it may sound, the alma mater is the one common thing that sort of unites all NHS students both past and present. Just for the record, my parents feel that the alma mater should be part of the required curriculum. Maybe they'll settle for all upcoming events.

A no-no and doubling point for many students is tests. Coming in a week to NHS is the dreaded PSAT test, for juniors, and in about two weeks, the SATs, for seniors.

PSAT (Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test) is a preview of the well-known SAT (Scholastic Aptitude Test). The SAT scores are distributed to colleges for admission. The PSAT gives students the chance to gain financial aid for college.

Both tests employ the action-packed procedure: three hours of filling in dots for answers to complicated questions. For an entire morning, the only company is the taker is his or her pencil. Some students take the tests lightly and others are tied in knots. Maybe I'm exaggerating. Once tests are really difficult, monumentaling the normally unsatisfying task, the student.

As you have anyone scream, have pressure, students also may not be as your pressures brain surgeon, as that of a bagger in groc they seem.

Good luck to all students this week. NHS taking tests are easy. Remember prepared and if you're not, to do your best and they'll soon over. Try to handle that tension, things'll get better.

Northern High School alumni band members reunite during homecoming game

Over fifty Northern High School alumni band and handfront members got together during last week's Homecoming game and performed with the high school band following the football game last Friday.

Organized at the spur of the moment by Richard Fyler, former band director, the event may become an annual affair during homecoming week. Talk of a town band forming was also discussed.

This being the first performance by the alumni, it was decided they were not quite ready to march in the Farmers' Fair parade this year.
